LIFESTYLE & CHARACTER

Roxbury, a vibrant and diverse neighborhood in Boston, Massachusetts, exudes a strong sense of community and belonging among its residents. According to a local survey, many residents feel a deep connection to their community, expressing satisfaction with the quality of life, which encompasses aspects such as healthcare, raising children, houses of worship, job opportunities, safety, and support. This neighborhood is seen as an excellent place to raise children, with ample schools, daycare facilities, after-school programs, and play areas. It is also considered a suitable place to age gracefully, with abundant green spaces, accessible transportation, healthcare services, and social support networks.

What sets Roxbury apart is its unique blend of urban living and community spirit. Despite its proximity to downtown Boston, Roxbury maintains a distinct identity, with residents expressing pride in their local culture and community resources. However, the neighborhood faces challenges related to transportation. Unlike predominantly white neighborhoods such as Back Bay, Beacon Hill, Fenway, and the West End, which have better access to rapid transit services, Roxbury, along with Dorchester, Mattapan, and Hyde Park, has large concentrations of Black and Latinx residents and is primarily served by buses. This results in longer commute times for residents, despite their relative proximity to employment centers. Yet, the resilience and spirit of Roxbury shines through, making it a unique and cherished part of Boston's diverse landscape.

WHO SHOULD LIVE HERE?

1) The neighborhood of Roxbury in Boston, Massachusetts, is most suitable for families, primarily due to its excellent school rating of 100.0 and a decent housing score of 69.9, suggesting good quality housing options and strong educational institutions for children. 2) Retirees might want to look elsewhere, as the neighborhood scores relatively low in healthcare (56.0) and safety (45.6), indicating that medical facilities and security might not be up to their expectations or needs.
